#1 Preview: The NBA (America's professional basketball association)
page has suddenly been set up!

who's completely neck-deep in NBA.

I'm an avid supporter of the Phoenix Suns,
where "Pork Kimchi" Charles Barkley is in.
It's the Suns' everyday
from morning till night.
Regardless of whether it's a sudden thing, or it's something that eventually is expected to happen, I've decided to start up this page on NBA.
The NBA stands for National Basketball Resociation...is what I wante to start off with, but that'll be presumptuous of me to write about that.
After all, when I want to Chicago to watch their match, I hadn't known that either.
Even then, how did I get myself
so obsessed with this game?

Hello! This is Narita, the one

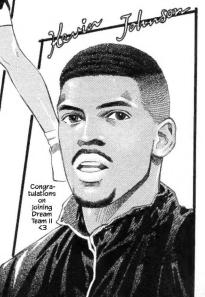

S\These two are said to address each other as "Kevin" and "Chuck". Their bromance for each other makes the hearts of girls flutter (?) Please don't retire---

Chourles

It was probably my total lack of experience to start off with, that drew me to NBR. So with that, from this month onwards, I'm plaming to start writing from this angle. The NBR playoffs are happening right mow (the top 16 teams are right in the middle of their elimination battles. It's airling late night on TV, but for those with broadcast satellites, please watch it if you're interested). See

#2: First off, let's find your favourite player

Dressed in a suit at the 1993 All Stars Games. Feels like it's "The King And I".

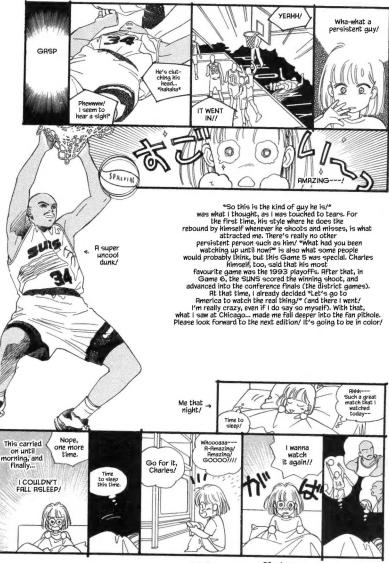

Hello everyone, how are you? Well then, let me teach you a shortcut towards becoming an NBA Freak. Do not pronounce NBA as n-bah*?) First off, let's find a favourite player/ You may think "What an aggressive way to start learning about MBAF," is the most erjoyable and fastest method. No matter how many games you watch on TV (ti's airing on MIK-BS 7), it can be "liking the way he playes" or "liking his face", you'll tend to focus on someone. Evidently, I started off with focusing on Charles Barkley from the beginning. The first time I saw him was at the match between USA and Rngold during the Barcelona Olympics, but I initially focused on him as a member of the dream team.

My first impression was "What a wild guy, huh/". Yes, I'm not interested in cool and smart people. (This is probably the reason why I'm not attracted to Jordan.) After that, I found out that he plays under a team called the PHOENIX SUNS. So I started noting down their matches. Then, they entered the play-offs. That fateril day finally came...and on that day, too, I viewed the match on TV while recording it.

#4: Basketball is a team sport, it's interesting because of the existence of team mates

Hello! We're finally nearing the start of the NBA season, and I feel blessed to be able to watch one season of Charles and KJ, as wel l as the SUNS play, together with all of you. After all, basketball is a team sport, and once you're familiar with the relationships the players have with one another, it gets even more interesting. Like I mentioned before, Charles watched KJ's back and covered him, but of course, such strong friendship between them didn't happen right from the start. Before superstar Charles Barkley joined the team, Kevin "KJ" Johnson, who was the team's pillar, faced Charles

#3 is not published due to space limitations.

After moving over to the SUNS, on the first day of training, in order to "look at my teammates' motivation", he played rough against Cedric Ceballos (not that he did something perverted, but he was said to have made an intense foul play), and the most furious one at that time was KJ. From then on, it seems that Charles admired KJ. admire admire admire admire admire after the finals, KJ, too, said with gratefulness, "Charles is not retiring. We will not let him do that". Even after that, his attitude remained cool. Before long, an absolutely serious player, A.C. Green, joined the team, and the SUNS players' personalities were totally all over the place (they were given names like the "individualist group", "reckless army", etc). "I wonder if these people can be led properly?" was the concern that I buried within my heart, as I flew over to the US again to view their match, this time to their home ground, Phoenix.

This conversation episode is generally true. What exactly are the SUNS...
